Gaurav Kaul. The anti-hero cop (Randhir Kapoor) who "loves everything about women". He is the epitome of machismo, and he treats everything (including women) in the most un-feminine way. His motto is 'blood and guts'. He is witty, he has "animal magnetism". He gives tough doses of beatings and loads of sexual harassment to women. Ankush (Amitabh Bachchan) is Neha's ex-lover. He abandoned her and her baby daughter, for his work. Though he loves her, Ankush is just a "proper, respectable, career-oriented" guy. The Police Officer His name is Gaurav Kaul. He's not married, he's simply a bachelor with so many oddities that people mistake him for being gay. His routine is to put up fliers everywhere, telling women that if they come in contact with him, then they will fall in love with him. He then harasses them shamelessly. He picks up on a young girl named Nandita and meets her. From there on he would turn her life upside down. Nandita is the daughter of the politician, who knows what would happen to her if he found out that his daughter has fallen in love with a cop. Plot The story is set in Delhi in 1989.

When Neha (Tara Sharma) receives a call from her boss, she leaves her home at midnight, without telling her husband Raj (Randhir Kapoor). She is heading to an unknown location with Raj. When they reach the place, she gets the shock of her life. Ankush (Amitabh Bachchan) is standing in front of them. Ankush was their housemaid. He was out of work, so Neha asked him to live in their house temporarily, but they never said anything to Raj about it. After a few days, Neha and Raj decided to move out of their house. They then invited Ankush to stay with them, but he refused because he has a kid. So Neha decided to move out of their house. When Neha leaves, she sees an unknown person holding her daughter. Neha's friends think that she is insane, but she insists that it is her ex-lover, who has abducted her daughter. Neha, with the help of her friend Sarika, moves her out of the city, 82157476af
